Old Testament Restoration Prophecies

Throughout the Old Testament (OT) prophets, threats of judgment are interspersed with promises of Israel's restoration. Indeed, almost in the same breath both threat and promise can be found.

Many (perhaps most) OT prophecies have for their background either the impending exile of God's people, or their exile as an accomplished fact.

Note that the prophets — irrespective of whether they were prophesying while the Assyrians were threatening or deporting the northern kingdom of Israel (Isaiah, Hosea, Amos, Micah), or whether they were prophesying much later when the Babylonians were threatening or deporting Judah (Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Joel?) — all have the following themes in common:

God will judge his people; they will be exiled; God will ultimately save and gather them from exile; they will enjoy peace and security under a Davidic/messianic king.

Even the earlier prophets anticipate the collapse and ultimate restoration of the Israelite monarchy; they do so well before its actual termination in 586 BC (Isa 9:6-7; 11:1-10; Am 9:11; Mic 4:8-9; 5:1-5a; cf. Hos 3:4-5).¹

And both Isaiah and Micah anticipate Judah's exile in Babylon, even though Assyria was the threatening power of their day.²

² Isaiah 40 – 66 assumes that the nation's exile in Babylon is almost over. Micah anticipates Jerusalem's (586 BC) destruction, along with the people's exile to, and ultimate rescue from, Babylon (Mic 3:12; 4:10).

Recurring OT prophetic themes include the following:

- Indictments of Israel and/or Judah for their wickedness.
- Threats of God’s judgment upon them, usually entailing foreign conquest and exile.
- “Day of the LORD”, “In that day” promises — the time when God will act decisively to judge or save.³
- God’s saving action, involving the release and return of his people from captivity — often coupled with his judgment of the oppressor.
- The remnant of Israel who survive God’s judgments will return to their land and city.
- A regathering of both Israel and Judah as one nation.
- The people’s return to God’s holy mountain — Mt. Zion.
- The rebuilding and restoration of Jerusalem.
- Jerusalem to be finally a holy city — purged of evildoers.
- Yahweh’s return to Jerusalem to dwell with his forgiven people.
- The restoration of David’s throne and kingdom, along with the subjugation of enemies.
- God’s people enjoying peace, prosperity, and security in the messianic kingdom.
- The disgrace of his people removed; their glory and honor restored.
- Salvation sometimes including Gentiles.

These themes can perhaps be summarized thus:

Israel’s salvation comes through judgment and transformation.

Israel will be judged, and ultimately so too will her enemies.

Israel (or Jerusalem) will be purged of evildoers, and a godly remnant will survive or return to inhabit the land.

With exile God was expelling his people from his presence because of sin (2Kgs 13:23; 17:18; 24:3, 20).

Exile was to all intents a recapitulation of Adam’s expulsion from the Garden.

Indeed, the exile of God’s people in Assyria and Babylon epitomized the exile of all mankind in Adam.

For this reason, when the OT prophets foretell the people’s deliverance — their return from exile and the nation’s restoration — they look beyond their immediate historical context.

They anticipate the definitive return and restoration under the Messiah:

Isaiah 9:6-7; 11:1-9; Jeremiah 23:5-6; 30:8-9; 33:15-17; Ezekiel 34:23-24; 37:24-25; Hosea 3:4-5; Amos 9:11-12; Zechariah 3:8; 6:12-13.

Gentiles, too, will be beneficiaries of God’s saving action:

Isaiah 2:1-4; 11:10; 14:1; 25:6-7; 42:1, 4, 6; 49:6; 55:5; 56:6-8; Jeremiah 3:17; Micah 4:1-2; Zechariah 2:11.

Gentiles also needed to be saved — to be restored to God’s presence and favor.

Gentile salvation is closely connected to Israel’s end-time restoration.

³ The “day of the LORD” refers to God’s judgment on Babylon (Isa 13:6, 9); Egypt (Jer 46:10; Eze 30:3); Israel (Joel 1:15; 2:1, 11, 31; Am 5:18); Edom and other nations (Ob 1:15); various nations (Joel 3:14); Judah (Zeph 1:7, 14). Judgment generally takes the form of foreign invasion. In Joel 1:15 (and probably also in 2:1, 11) judgment entails a locust invasion. Judgment Day in the New Testament is often called “the day of Christ” (or similar), because he is the Judge (1Cor 1:8; 5:5; 2Cor 1:14; Php 1:6, 10; 2:16; cf. 2Pet 3:10, 12).

Forgiveness and cleansing from sin are prerequisites for Israel's restoration as God's holy people:
Isaiah 1:18; 43:25; 44:22; 53:5-6, 8, 10-12; 55:7; Jeremiah 31:34; 33:8; 50:20; Ezekiel 36:25, 33; Joel 3:21;
Micah 7:18-19; Zechariah 3:9; 13:1.⁴

These prophecies anticipate the New Covenant's provision of forgiveness and justification through Christ.
See Romans 4:4-8; Hebrews 8:8-12.

The recurrence of these themes throughout the OT prophets is surely significant:

The Holy Spirit, who inspired the prophets (1Pet 1:10-11), clearly wants us to understand Jesus' redemptive accomplishments in terms of these great themes.

Indeed, the New Testament itself concludes with a vision of a "new Jerusalem" (Revelation 21 – 21).

Much of that city's description derives from Isaiah and Ezekiel, showing the fulfillment of their prophecies.

John's vision therefore depicts what Jesus has finally accomplished:

1. The promised end-time restoration of Israel/Jerusalem.
2. The definitive deliverance and regathering of God's people from exile.
3. Their reconciliation to God and readmittance into his presence.

⁴ This link between restoration from exile and God's forgiveness is clearly affirmed in Psalm 85:1-3 (KJV, MEV).

Restoration in Isaiah

Isaiah prophesied from about 740 to after 701 BC.

Chapters 1 to 35 have, for their background, the brutal Assyrian invasions:

From 733 to 722 BC the Assyrians dismembered the northern kingdom of Israel and deported many of its inhabitants. The capital, Samaria, fell in 722 following a three-year siege.

Following the failed Assyrian campaign against Jerusalem in 701 BC (related in chaps. 36 – 37), Isaiah foretells the future ascendancy of Babylon (chap. 39).

Babylon became leading power some 90 years later with the sacking of the Assyrian capital, Nineveh, in 612 BC. In Isaiah's final section (chaps. 40 – 66) the prophetic focus shifts to the distant future — to Judah's eventual return from exile in Babylon.

In Isaiah, salvation entails a return or gathering of people to God's holy mountain — to Mt. Zion.

See Isaiah 11:9; 27:13; 56:7; 57:13; 65:25; 66:20.

Additionally, Israel's release from captivity is patterned after the first great deliverance in the Exodus — the new deliverance will be, as it were, a second and greater Exodus (see Isaiah 11:11, 15-16).⁵

A related theme is that of the Remnant — those of the nation who survive God's judgments:

With evildoers destroyed, the righteous remnant alone will remain, or return from exile to repossess their land and city. See Isaiah 1:9; 4:2-3; 6:13; 10:20-23; 11:11, 16; 28:5; 37:31-32; 46:3; 49:6.

This remnant concept (though not always the term itself) is found in other OT prophets as well:

Jeremiah 3:14; 23:3; 50:20; Ezekiel 9:4-6; Joel 2:32; Amos 5:15; 9:8; Micah 2:12; 4:7; 5:7-8; 7:18;

Zephaniah 2:7, 9; 3:12-13; Malachi 4:1-3.

First-century Jewish Christians viewed themselves as constituting this faithful remnant (see Romans 11:1-6).

The Hebrews author addressed these believing Jews, urging them to remain faithful in view of God's imminent judgment on their nation (cf. Heb 10:25, 30, 39).

Revelation 7:1-8 shows the first-century Jewish remnant being sealed by God to exempt them from coming judgment (cf. Eze 9:4-6). 12,000 were sealed from each Israelite tribe, 144,000 in total.⁶

This Jewish remnant constituted a sort of "firstfruits" of God's great harvest of people for his kingdom — see James 1:18 (cf. 1:1); Revelation 14:4.

⁵ This Second Exodus motif is also to be found in Jeremiah 16:14-15; 23:7-8.

⁶ Members come from all twelve Israelite tribes: OT promises concerning the ultimate reunion of both kingdoms (Israel and Judah) are shown as having been fulfilled through Christ (cf. Isa 11:12-13; Jer 3:18; 23:5-6; Eze 37:15-22; Hos 1:11).

Isaiah 1:1 – 2:4

Date: About 740 BC.⁷

Isaiah's prologue initiates themes that recur throughout his prophecies:

Indictment for sin, divine judgment, salvation for the remnant, Jerusalem's final restoration.

- Only a small remnant will survive God's judgments (1:9).
- Jerusalem is likened to Sodom and Gomorrah (1:10).
- God offers forgiveness even for deep-rooted sins, but they must learn to obey him (1:18-20).
- The city will be judged and purged of evildoers (1:24-25).
- Though now a harlot (1:21), Jerusalem will again be called "the city of righteousness, the faithful city" (1:26).
- Isaiah 2:1-4 shows Jerusalem's definitive "last days" (MEV) restoration, with its temple becoming a worship focus for the Gentiles. They will seek out Israel's God (cf. Isa 11:10).

God's law and word will be universally proclaimed, leading to peace and productivity.

In Revelation, Jerusalem is called "Sodom" (Rev 11:8) and a "harlot" (Rev 17:1, 5, 15-16; 19:2, ASV).⁸

This city is judged (Revelation 18), and in her place comes a new Jerusalem.

New Jerusalem is a "holy city", a faithful Bride (Rev 21:2, 9-10); evildoers are excluded (Rev 21:27; 22:15); only those washed clean through Christ are admitted (Rev 22:14; cf. 7:14).

Isaiah 4:2-6

- Restoration under Yahweh's "branch" (4:2) — the Messiah (cf. Isa 11:1; Jer 23:5; 33:15; Zec 3:8; 6:12).
- Jerusalem will be inhabited by a holy remnant (4:3).
- God will cleanse its inhabitants of sin (4:4).
- God himself will be present to guide and protect, as in Israel's desert wanderings (4:5-6).

The prophecies of Isaiah 9 – 12:

Date: About 730 BC.

These prophecies are set against the brutality of the Assyrian invasion of Israel in 733 BC.

Assyria had annexed the northern half of Israel (Galilee) as well as the region east of the Jordan (Gilead).

Many Israelites had been deported (2Kgs 15:29).

Isaiah 9:1-7

Against this seeming hopelessness, Isaiah prophesies concerning a Davidic king who will arise to crush the Assyrian oppressor. He will rule with justice over God's people forever (9:6-7; cf. Isa 16:5).

Which leads to an important point:

Isaiah frequently relates the final messianic kingdom to Jerusalem's deliverance from the Assyrian threat of his own day.

⁷ Isaiah's prophecies are for the most part impossible to accurately date. The kings referred to in Isaiah 1:1 reigned as follows: Uzziah, 767-740 BC; Jotham, 740-735 BC; Ahaz, 735-715 BC; Hezekiah, 715-686 BC. (Not including their time as co-regents.) See page 32, Appendix: The dating of Isaiah's prophecies.

⁸ In Revelation 11:8, Jerusalem ("where their Lord was crucified") is called "Sodom and Egypt" and "the great city". Later we see that the great city and Babylon are one and the same (Rev 18:10, 21). Then the Harlot herself is identified as Babylon and as the great city (Rev 17:5, 18). Therefore, Jerusalem = Sodom = Egypt = the great city = Babylon = the Harlot. The point being this: Jerusalem has become the sworn enemy of God's people — their chief persecutor (Rev 17:6; 18:20, 24).

Isaiah 10:5-25

Assyria was the “rod” of God’s anger sent against his own people (10:5-6), but that nation went well beyond God’s intent (10:7).

When God has finished employing them to discipline his people, he will punish the Assyrians for their haughty defiance (10:12-19, 25).

All this to be tied to the saving of a chastened remnant within Israel (10:20-25).

Isaiah 11

Further prophecies concerning the Davidic king (cf. Isa 7:14; 9:6-7):

With David’s line cut down in judgment, this king will arise as a shoot from Jesse’s “stump” (11:1).⁹

Endowed with God’s Spirit, he will rule over the restored nation wisely and with justice (11:2-5).

God’s people will enjoy peace and security on his “holy mountain” — in Jerusalem (11:6-9).

The Gentiles will themselves rally to and seek guidance from this king (11:10; cf. Isa 2:3).

His resting place (where he lives) will be “filled with glory” (11:10, EXB; cf. Isa 4:5).

God’s people will be gathered as in a second Exodus, and their former dominion will be restored (11:11-16).

The lasting peace to be enjoyed in the messianic age is a prominent theme in Isaiah:

International relations will be transformed (2:1-4); foreign oppression will cease (9:1-7); former enemies (Egyptians, Assyrians, Israelites) will be reconciled as they worship God together (19:23-25); nothing will threaten God’s people gathered to Jerusalem (Isa 35:9-10; 65:19-25).

Isaiah 11:6-9 depicts perfect harmony between creatures that are natural enemies: predators and prey.

How might this relate to the prophecies above?

Answer: The imagery speaks of conditions in Messiah’s kingdom: former enemies will dwell harmoniously together under his rule.

Isaiah informs us that even the Gentiles will rally to and seek guidance from this king (11:10).

So, the prophecy is concerned with harmony between Israelites and their (former) enemies.¹⁰

Fulfillment:

It is surely significant that Paul in Romans 15:12 cites Isaiah 11:10 (LXX) to support his assertion that Gentile salvation was God’s intention all along (cf. Rom 15:9-12).

In context, Paul is urging Jews and Gentiles to accept each other — to show love and forbearance; to have a spirit of unity and harmony (Rom 14:1 – 15:13, esp. 15:1-7).

Paul evidently understood Isaiah’s prophecies as being fulfilled in his day via the gospel, as the “knowledge of the LORD” (Isa 11:9) spread throughout the Roman world and beyond. Diverse groups were becoming united under the lordship of Christ. In church life, the natural hostility between Jews and Gentiles was being eroded as they worshipped God together (Rom 15:5-7; Eph 2:14-15).¹¹

⁹ He will be a new and better son of Jesse, a greater David.

¹⁰ The absence of ferocious animals in Isaiah 35:9 and Ezekiel 34:25 similarly depicts the peace and security to be enjoyed by God’s redeemed people.

¹¹ Many Christians believe that Isaiah 11 is foretelling some future transformation of nature, where the Curse is reversed and predators are transformed (back) into herbivores. As explained above, the prophet is dealing with far more weighty matters.

Isaiah 13 – 14

Date: About 725 BC?

These chapters initiate a series of prophecies against the nations, beginning with Babylon (13:1 – 14:23) and Assyria (14:24-27) and extending to smaller nations — Philistia, Moab, Damascus, Cush, Egypt, etc.

- Though Assyria was the world power then dismembering the northern kingdom, Isaiah anticipates the ultimate ascendancy of Babylon and that nation's eventual conquest by the Medes under Cyrus (13:17).
- The "day of the LORD" (Isa 13:6, 9) is his coming against Babylon with a foreign army (13:3-9). Note the cosmic imagery used to describe Babylon's demise (13:10; cf. Isa 34:4).
- Babylon's fall is linked to the restoration of Israel:
Yahweh will gather and resettle the exiles, and foreigners will join the restored nation (14:1).
The restored nation will rule over her former oppressors (14:2; cf. Isa 11:14; 49:23; 60:12; Mic 5:4-9).

Isaiah 15 – 16

Date: About 718 BC.

Isaiah prophesies about the judgment that is soon to overtake Moab — Israel's neighbor and frequent enemy.

Refugees from Moab will seek safety and asylum in Judah from the invading Assyrians (16:2-4).¹²

Proud Moab is advised, in her time of crisis, to submit to the king in Jerusalem (16:1; cf. 2Kgs 3:4).

Ultimate deliverance from injustice and oppression will come only through God's appointed king, to whom Moab and all others must submit (16:4-5).

Isaiah 24 – 27

As elsewhere in Isaiah, the various judgments of this section relate to the time when God will deliver his exiled people and gather them to Jerusalem.¹³

- God's judgment seems to be directed against the world's nations generally (24:1-22).
Such judgment will clearly demonstrate that Yahweh "reigns on Mount Zion and in Jerusalem" (24:23).
- In this section, the phrase "on/in that day" (24:21; 25:9; 26:1; 27:1-2, 12-13) refers to the time of God's judgment and salvation:
The time of salvation — of God's deliverance of his people from exile and oppression (25:9; cf. Isaiah 12).
The time of judgment upon the nation's enemies: Moab (25:10-12); "Leviathan" (27:1).
- The righteous will enter Jerusalem (Isa 26:1-2); Israel itself will flourish (27:6).
- The restored nation will be greatly enlarged (26:15; cf. Isa 49:19-20; 54:2-3; Zec 2:4).
- God had not dealt with his people as harshly as he had with their oppressors (27:7).
God shows restraint even as he disciplines his people with exile (27:8).
Through such discipline they will be purged of idolatry (27:9).
- God will "thresh" (judge) in order to separate out and gather his people from Assyria and Egypt.
The exiles will be gathered with the sound of a great (Jubilee) trumpet.
They will return to worship Yahweh on his "holy mountain at Jerusalem" (27:12-13; cf. Isa 11:6-12).
- On Mount Zion (cf. 24:23) God will prepare a feast for all nations; he will destroy death and wipe away tears and remove his people's disgrace from the earth (25:6-8).

¹² Moab's destruction came about with the Assyrian invasion under Sargon II in 715 BC. Isaiah prophesied some three years prior, around 718 BC (cf. Isa 16:14).

¹³ This section is often called "The Little Apocalypse" because it supposedly deals with universal judgment at the end of the world. But enough evidence is presented here to show the passage's true significance.

Note the death/resurrection language employed here (Isaiah 25:7-8; 26:19):

⁷ And [God] will swallow up on this mountain the covering that is cast over all peoples, the veil that is spread over all nations.

⁸ He will swallow up death forever; and the Lord GOD will wipe away tears from all faces, and the reproach of his people he will take away from all the earth.

^{26:19} Your dead shall live; their bodies shall rise. You who dwell in the dust, awake and sing for joy! ... and the earth will give birth to the dead.

Israel's return to God's holy mountain is here tied to the termination of death itself.

"Covering" and "veil" (25:7) might refer to a burial shroud (the sheet in which a corpse is wrapped for burial), and/or to the veils that cover the faces of mourners at a funeral.

Either way, the references are to death and to the gloom associated with it.

Is Isaiah's language here merely a vivid description of national restoration — as in Ezekiel 37:1-14?

This might perhaps be the case with the latter verse (Isa 26:19).

But this cannot be so for the former promise (Isa 25:7-8), since all nations are beneficiaries.

Moreover, Paul's application of this promise to the final Resurrection shows that he viewed it as no mere metaphor: "Death is swallowed up in victory" (1Cor 15:54) derives directly from Isaiah 25:8.

It seems that Paul regarded the Resurrection as tied to Israel's end-time restoration/salvation.¹⁴

As I explain elsewhere, the Resurrection is indeed to be understood in terms of Man's release from captivity, of the end of his exile, and of his readmittance into God's presence in heaven.¹⁵

Isaiah 32 – 33

Date: 702 BC.

Isaiah again relates the final messianic kingdom to Jerusalem's deliverance from the Assyrian threat:

- The messianic king will reign justly and appoint godly leaders over his subjects (32:1-2).
- His people will be responsive to him, becoming wise and godly (32:3-8; cf. 6:9-10; 29:9-12).
- The complacent women of Jerusalem will tremble as the invading Assyrian army destroys the land and its crops (32:9-13). This will transpire in just over one year's time (32:10).¹⁶
- Ultimately God will save his people; he will pour out his life-imparting Spirit, reversing the devastation caused by the invaders (32:15).

Justice and righteousness, and quietness and confidence (32:16-17), will be the lot of God's people.

- The destructive, traitorous Assyrians will finally be destroyed and betrayed (33:1).¹⁷
- The consequences of the Assyrian invasion are described in 33:7-9.

¹⁴ According to Roy E. Ciampa and Brian S. Rosner, "Isaiah 25:8 is cited in rabbinic literature as a divine promise that death would be no more in the age to come." Section on 1 Corinthians 15:54. In: G.K. Beale and D.A. Carson, editors, Commentary on the New Testament Use of the Old Testament (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Academic, 2007), p. 747. In Jewish parlance, "age to come" denoted the future messianic age and kingdom. Undoubtedly this interpretation is correct, for Isaiah ties death's destruction to the time when Yahweh will reign on Mount Zion (24:23; 25:6-8). All nations will enjoy these blessings in God's future kingdom.

¹⁵ See my article on this website: Resurrection represents the end of Man's exile, pp. 9-11.

¹⁶ Fulfilled with Sennacherib's invasion of Judah and siege of Jerusalem in 701 BC.

¹⁷ Hezekiah paid Sennacherib to withdraw its army (2Kgs 18:14), but the Assyrians still attacked and demanded total surrender. Hence the "you traitor" in Isaiah 33:1, and the "covenants are broken" in 33:8.

- The ungodly in Jerusalem will be afraid, sensing that the God who dwells therein is acting in judgment against them (33:14; cf. 32:9-13).
- Zion will finally be inhabited by a righteous remnant (33:15-24):
They will see their king (33:17; cf. 32:1).
Their enemies will be no more (33:18-19); Jerusalem will be eternally secure (33:20-21).
Yahweh himself will be their judge, lawgiver, king, and savior (33:22).
No one in Jerusalem will be sick, for everyone living there will have their sins forgiven (33:24).

Isaiah 34 – 35

God's deliverance of his people is tied to his judgment of the nations:

- God is angry with all nations and will destroy them (34:1-4).
- Edom especially — symbolic of all God's enemies — will be totally destroyed (34:5-6, 9-15; cf. Isa 63:1-6).
- God acts in vengeance "for the cause of Zion" (34:8).
- The lot of God's people will be completely transformed — like the desert after rain (35:1-2).
- This deliverance anticipates the work of Yahweh's Servant (35:5-6a; cf. Isa 42:7; Lk 4:18; 7:22).
- Only the redeemed and holy will enter restored Zion — no unclean or wicked person (35:8-10).
- Gladness and joy will replace sorrow and sighing (35:10).

Isaiah 40 – 66

In this, Isaiah's final section, the prophetic focus shifts to the distant future — to Judah's eventual return from exile in Babylon. Isaiah here prophesies of events that would transpire 140+ years after his own death.¹⁸

Cyrus, who Isaiah twice mentions by name, will be God's agent to deliver the people and rebuild Jerusalem (41:2, 25; 44:28; 45:1-5, 13; 46:11; 48:14-15).¹⁹

Yet this final section looks beyond Cyrus.

Isaiah's prophecies are punctuated with several "Servant Songs" that foretell the coming of One who will definitively save and restore. These Songs are found in Isaiah 42:1-7; 49:1-9; 50:4-9; 52:13 – 53:12; 61:1-3.²⁰

Yahweh's Servant will save by dealing with the root cause of exile — the people's sin (Isaiah 53; cf. 50:1):

- Restoration to God's presence will necessitate their forgiveness (40:2; 43:25; 44:22; 55:7).
- The Servant's saving work will extend to the Gentiles (42:1, 4, 6; 49:6; 52:15; 55:4-5; 56:6-8).
- He will bring Jubilee release for the captives (61:1-2).
- Great blessing will attend restored Zion and her inhabitants (54:1-3, 11-17; 60:1-22; 65:17-25).
Yahweh himself will return to dwell there (52:8).
Gentile nations will be attracted to her splendor; everyone will be invited to partake of her blessings — even the wicked upon their repentance (55:1-7).
- Instead of the gloom and sorrow of exile there will be great joy (51:3; 55:12; 65:19; cf. Isa 35:10).
- So altered will Jerusalem's circumstances be that it will be as if new heavens and a new earth have come about — a whole new order (65:17; 66:22).

¹⁸ Isaiah in this section anticipates Judah's future exile in Babylon even though Assyria (not Babylon) was the dominant world power of his day. According to tradition, Isaiah died by being sawn in two during the reign of King Manasseh (cf. Heb 11:37).

¹⁹ The unity of Isaiah, often denied by liberal scholars, is clearly demonstrated by the theme of Jerusalem's restoration that pervades the entire book — from chapter 1 on.

²⁰ Isaiah 61:1-3 isn't usually, but probably ought to be, regarded as an additional (fifth) Servant Song.

Isaiah 52:13 – 53:12

Isaiah's fourth Servant Song shows the Servant's death to be the means by which the people's guilt will be removed:

- The Servant will be "pierced" and "crushed" on account of the people's sin (53:5).
- He will bear the "chastisement" (punishment) due to them, so that they might enjoy peace (53:5).
- He will be "cut off out of the land of the living" for their sin (53:8) — killed despite his own innocence (53:9).
- It will be Yahweh's will to "crush" him in order to make his life "an offering for guilt" (53:10).
- The Servant will be raised from death and restored to divine favor (Isaiah 53:11a, WEB):
*After the suffering of his soul, he will see the light and be satisfied.*²¹
- His death will result in the nation's acquittal:
He will "justify the many, for he shall bear their iniquities" (53:11b, MEV).
- In his death "he bore the sin of many and made intercession for the transgressors" (53:12, MEV).
- Isaiah 52:13-15 (and 53:12) relates the Servant's vindication and exaltation before the nations.

These prophecies are truly remarkable:

- Israel's exile — her expulsion from the land — represented the nation's death.²²
The Servant is the one true (the ideal, perfect) Israelite. In fact, he is even called "Israel" (Isa 49:3).
So, in Isaiah 53, "Israel" the person substitutes for "Israel" the people.
The Servant's death will represent the ultimate exile; his resurrection will be the ultimate restoration.
He substitutes for the nation: his death/exile on behalf of Israel means that the nation will be finally restored, not destroyed.
- Isaiah's prophecy shows how the Law's sin-offerings will be finally fulfilled:
No mere animal can ever atone for sin — rather, the Servant will himself substitute for sinners, enduring and thereby appeasing God's wrath (propitiation).
That's how God can forgive people (e.g., Ex 34:7; Ps 32:1-5; 51:1-9; 85:1-3; 103:3, 10-12; 130:1ff.).
- All this was fulfilled in Jesus' substitutionary death on the cross (2 Corinthians 5:21, my translation):
God made him who knew no sin to be sin for us, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God.

Charles Ellicott comments concerning this verse:

God dealt with Christ, not as though He were a sinner, like other men, but as though He were sin itself, absolutely identified with it.²³

²¹ The WEB here follows the Dead Sea Scrolls text of Isaiah 53:11 which reads: "from the labor of his soul, he will see light and he will be satisfied." The Masoretic text omits the underlined words.

Several other translations have also chosen to follow the DSS variant: CSB, EHV, EXB, NABRE, NCB, NIV, NRSV.

That "light" was part of the original text is suggested by its presence also in the (pre-Christian) Greek Septuagint translation.

See the online article by Jeff A. Benner: The Great Isaiah Scroll and the Masoretic Text, <https://www.ancient-hebrew.org/dss/great-isaiah-scroll-and-the-masoretic-text.htm>.

²² Moses, in Deuteronomy, anticipates Israel's future exile and portrays it as the nation's death. Disobedience will cause Israel to "perish" or be destroyed (Dt 4:26; 6:15; 7:4; 8:19-20; 11:17; 28:20; 45, 48, 51, 61, 63; 30:18).

As Kenneth Turner observes, "The people will continue to exist physically in exile; yet, as a single entity, Israel is said to 'perish' or 'be destroyed.' So, it is not Israel as an historical or socio-religious people, but Israel as Yahweh's elect son and servant (Dt 1:31; 7:6; 14:1) that is put to death. Exile constitutes the death of Israel as a nation in covenant [with Yahweh]."

https://biblehub.com/commentaries/ellcotti/2_corinthians/5.htm.

- The Servant will die “for the transgression of my people” (53:8) — for Israel.
Yet his work will benefit the nations too:
Kings and nations will be awe-struck by his transformation from suffering Servant into glorious and exalted Savior — when they learn of his true dignity (52:13-15).
Paul cites the latter part of Isaiah 52:15 in connection with his desire to preach the gospel to those who have never before heard it — see Romans 15:21.
- Thus will the Servant’s saving work extend to the Gentiles; they too will be gathered to Jerusalem (Isa 49:6; 56:6-8; 1Pet 2:24-25). But the “unclean” will never enter the city (Isa 52:1).

Paul’s application of Isaiah’s prophecies

Paul viewed Isaiah’s restoration prophecies as being, for the most part, fulfilled in his own day through the gospel. We can see this from the way he relates Isaiah’s prophecies to his own ministry to the Gentiles, and to the first-century responses of Jews and Gentiles to the gospel:

Acts 13:47; Romans 9:27-29, 33; 10:11, 15-16, 20-21; 15:12, 21; 2 Corinthians 6:1-2; Galatians 4:26-27.

Restoration in Jeremiah

Jeremiah prophesied from 627 to 586 BC — a century after the fall of the northern kingdom of Israel.

This was a turbulent period, with the rise of Babylon at the expense of Assyria.

Nineveh fell in 612 BC. In 601 BC Judah came under Babylonian rule.

There were three deportations under Nebuchadnezzar — in 597, 586 and 581 BC (Jer 52:28-30).²⁴

Jeremiah witnessed the first two deportations.

Jeremiah 3:6-18

Date: ca. 615 BC.

God indicts Judah for imitating Israel's sinful practices — practices that had led to the northern kingdom's exile over a century earlier (3:6-10).

Judah's repentance during the religious reforms of Josiah (628-622 BC) had been superficial (3:10).

God commissions Jeremiah to call the Israelites, exiled and scattered among the nations to the north, to repent and return to the One who is their true Lord (3:12-14).

God himself will restore a remnant from the exiled Israelites:

"I will take you, one from a city and two from a family, and I will bring you to Zion" (3:14).

He will give them good leaders and prosper them in the land (3:15-16).

At that time Israel and Judah will both be gathered from exile and reestablished in their own land (3:18), and the Gentile nations themselves will come to seek Yahweh in Jerusalem:

"At that time Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the LORD, and all nations shall gather to it, to the presence of the LORD in Jerusalem, and they shall no more stubbornly follow their own evil heart" (3:17).

Jeremiah 22:24-30

Yahweh declares that King Jehoiachin will be exiled and that none of his descendants will sit on David's throne.

This was fulfilled in March 597 BC, when the Babylonians deported Jehoiachin and 10,000 of the city's inhabitants and carried off the temple treasures (2Kgs 24:13-15; Jer 24:1).

King Zedekiah (a son of Josiah) reigned in his stead, until the city's destruction in August 586 BC.

Jeremiah 25

Date: 605 BC.

God will judge and destroy Judah and the surrounding nations through his servant Nebuchadnezzar (25:9).

After 70 years, Babylon in turn will be judged (25:12-14).

²⁴ Jehoiakim reigned for 11 years (609 to 598 BC). Eight years into his reign (601 BC), Judah came under Babylonian rule. Then, after three years as Nebuchadnezzar's vassal (598 BC), Jehoiakim decided to rebel (2Kgs 24:1; Dan 1:1). Nebuchadnezzar responded by sending a punitive army. Jehoiakim died around this time, although the exact circumstances of his death remain uncertain. (Compare 2 Kings 24:6, 2 Chronicles 36:6, Jeremiah 22:18-19, and Daniel 1:1-2.) His son Jehoiachin reigned for just 3 months (December 598 to mid-March 597 BC) before surrendering to Nebuchadnezzar (2Kgs 24:8-12). Jehoiachin and 10,000 of his subjects were then deported to Babylon (2Kgs 24:14). Ezekiel, and perhaps Daniel and his friends, were among those exiled around this time — either before the siege or at the end of it. The traditional date for Daniel's exile (605 BC) is probably too early. See Kurt Simmons' comments in Adumbrations (Carlsbad, NM: Biblical Publishing Company, 2009), pp. 33-38, 47-48.

Jeremiah 23:3-8; 30:1 – 33:26

Prophecies of the nation's final regathering from exile and restoration to their land:

- Jeremiah prophesies concerning a Davidic king whom God will raise up to reign over the restored nation (23:5-6; 30:9; 33:15-16).

The name of the king, and of Jerusalem itself, will be: "The LORD is our righteousness" (23:6; 33:16).

- God will gather his people in a new and greater Exodus (23:7-8; cf. 16:14-15; Isa 11:11, 15-16).
- God will establish with his restored people a New Covenant, different from the failed Mosaic covenant. In this new relationship, Yahweh will write his law of their hearts so that each person will truly know him. He will completely forgive their sins (31:31-34). And he will give them singleness of heart to obey him (32:39).
- Despite all their wickedness, God will never finally reject his people (31:35-37; 33:23-26).

Restoration in Ezekiel

Ezekiel was exiled to Babylon in 597 BC. He was from a family of priests (Eze 1:3).

Ezekiel's inaugural vision, received in July 593 BC, was God's call to him to preach and prophesy to his fellow exiles in Babylon (Ezekiel 1:1 – 3:27). He prophesied from 593 to 571 BC.

The following is a summary of Cornelis Vanderwaal's introduction to Ezekiel in his Search the Scriptures series:

- With the exile in 597 BC the "church" had been separated into two parts. The "proletariat" who remained behind in Judah were contemptuous of their former leaders now in exile in Babylon. Those leaders surely deserved to be punished! As for themselves, they were continuing to enjoy God's favor and blessings.
- Nor did the Jewish exiles grasp the gravity of the situation. They cherished false hopes of soon returning home. Ezekiel was to throw cold water on any lingering hope that Judah's independence would be restored.
- Ezekiel was called (in 593 BC) to proclaim the reality of God's judgment, which was the cause of their deportation. Through Ezekiel God repeatedly tells the people: "Then you will know that I am the LORD." Yahweh watches over his own honor; he vindicates himself, especially in his judgment of Jerusalem.
- Ezekiel was to demolish all pride and optimism. Jerusalem's imminent destruction was not a defeat for Yahweh; rather, it was a necessary prerequisite for his saving action. From those miserable Jews in exile he would ultimately create a new people: a bright future lay ahead, but in God's time.
- After preaching judgment for several years, news reached the exiles concerning the fall of Jerusalem. This led to a turnaround in Ezekiel's message; from chapter 34 on we find prophecies of salvation. The same prophet who sought to undermine all grounds for earthly nationalistic hope now brings Yahweh's word of comfort. (A similar change in emphasis occurs with Jeremiah.)
- Yahweh, who for the sake of his name drove the Judahites from their city, will now restore Jerusalem — for his name's sake. Ezekiel receives visions of a new temple and a new Jerusalem. All enemy powers are vanquished, and Eden-like conditions return. The restored city, renamed "The LORD Is There", will demonstrate that he is indeed the Sovereign Lord.²⁵

Ezekiel 8 – 11

In September 592 BC Ezekiel was transported in a vision to Jerusalem. God shows him the idolatrous practices that were taking place within the temple itself (chap. 8).

Ezekiel is shown God's judgment falling upon the city's inhabitants (chap. 9). The godly within the city receive a mark on their foreheads to exempt them from judgment; all others are killed without mercy (9:4-6).

Ezekiel is then shown God's glory departing from the Jerusalem temple (chap. 10).

In Ezekiel 11:1-13 judgment is pronounced on the inhabitants of Jerusalem who, with the Babylonian threat receding, had grown complacent. Weren't they the "meat" (the choice portions) of the city (11:3)?

No! says Yahweh. Their murdered victims were the real meat (11:6-7).

So far from being the city's meat God will bring judgment upon them and drive them far away (11:7-12).

In Ezekiel 11:14-20 God promises restoration for Ezekiel's fellow exiles — whom the Jerusalemites had written off as being far away from, and forsaken by, God (11:15). Though indeed driven far from the temple, Yahweh had himself become their sanctuary in exile — present among them to bless and preserve (11:16).

In time he will regather them to their land. Idolatry will cease. He will grant them a new heart to obey him. Thus will their covenant relationship be restored (11:17-20).

Ezekiel 34; 36 – 37

Following Jerusalem's fall (586 BC), Ezekiel's messages included promises of restoration (chaps. 34; 36 – 37; 40 – 48) interspersed with threats of judgment against Edom and Gog (chaps. 35; 38 – 39).

- God will, as a shepherd, gather his exiled people to the land (34:11-24).
He will also place "David" over them as their shepherd (34:23-24).
- He will establish a "covenant of peace" with them (34:25; 37:26).
This peace (Hebrew: shalom) will entail a restored relationship with God and a life blessed by him — a secure, full, and prosperous life. No threatening wild animals (34:25)!
- God will restore the nation for the sake of his own holy name and reputation (36:22-23).
- In so doing he will cleanse them from sin, grant them a new and responsive heart, and impart his Spirit to enable them to obey him (36:25-27; 37:23).
- This restoration will be akin to a resurrection of people who have long been dead (37:1-14).
- Both Judah and Israel will return from exile and become one nation (37:15-22).
- "David" will be prince and shepherd over the restored nation — forever (37:24-25).
- God will dwell in their midst in his "sanctuary". He will be their God, and they his (holy) people (37:27-28).

Ezekiel 40 – 48

Ezekiel's received this, his final vision, in April 573 BC — in the 25th year of his own exile (40:1) and 13 years after the Babylonian destruction of Jerusalem and its temple.

This vision concerns the restoration of Israel as a purified, holy nation, and it includes a detailed account of a glorious new temple:

- The new temple's courts, gates, rooms and structure (chaps. 40 – 42).
- The return of God's glory to the temple and his promise to dwell there forever (43:1-9).
- Various regulations (chaps. 43 – 46).
- The temple's river (47:1-12).
- The new nation's external boundaries and tribal allotments (47:13 – 48:29).
- Jerusalem's gates (48:30-35).

John's New Jerusalem draws on Ezekiel's vision as follows:

- The New Jerusalem's 12 gates — three on each side, each gate associated with one Israelite tribe (Rev 21:12-13; cf. Eze 48:30-35).
- The city's cubic dimensions (Rev 21:16) recall those of the inner sanctuary (the Most Holy Place) of the tabernacle, of Solomon's temple, and of Ezekiel's idealized temple (1Kgs 6:20; Eze 41:4).
The significance is obvious — the entire city is God's new "inner sanctuary" where he sits enthroned. The city's inhabitants have uninterrupted access to him. Every citizen is a priest.
- The "river of the water of life" flowing from God's throne in the city, with the tree of life on each bank bearing fruit every month and whose leaves are for the healing of the nations (Rev 22:1-2).
In Ezekiel's vision (47:1-12), the "water from the sanctuary" (47:12) gets deeper and becomes a swimmable river (47:5). The river flows eastwards and into the Dead Sea (47:8).
Wherever it flows it supports life — the salt water becomes fresh and numerous creatures thrive (47:9-10). But there will be areas left untouched and lifeless (47:11).
Fruit trees of all kinds grow on the river's banks (47:7, 12) — reminiscent of Eden.
Watered by the life-enhancing sanctuary water, these trees bear fruit every month, and their leaves are for healing (47:12).

Restoration in Hosea

Hosea 1:6-7, 10-11

Hosea's messages were directed primarily to the northern kingdom of Israel.

He prophesied during Israel's last years, prior to and during the nation's dismemberment by the Assyrians.

He was a contemporary of Amos, Isaiah, and Micah.

Hosea was required to marry an adulterous wife, with their relationship reflecting God's own relationship with Israel.

As with other prophets, threats of judgment are interspersed with promises of restoration:

- God will abandon Israel. But he will deliver Judah from the Assyrians — and that not by conventional military means (1:6-7).
God spared Judah in 722 BC, and he delivered them again in 701 BC (Isaiah 37).
- Despite Israel's looming exile, the promise to Abraham of numerous offspring will yet be fulfilled. The Israelites will again be God's people (1:10).
- Judah and Israel will ultimately be reunited under one leader (1:11).

Note that Paul (in Romans 9:25-26) relates Hosea 1:10 and 2:23 — promises of Israel's restoration — to the ingathering of people through the gospel. God delights to call outsiders to himself.

Hosea 3:3-5

Hosea was to love and take Gomer back even as Yahweh loved the wayward Israelites.

- She must live with him, but there would be no sexual intimacy until she fully recommits herself to him. It would be a time of discipline and rededication (3:3-4).
So also, Israel will remain in exile, deprived of kingship and religious worship.
- Ultimately the Israelites will "return and seek the LORD their God, and David their king," and thereby enjoy all his benefits (3:5). Having long been in revolt against the house of David, the Israelites will return and submit themselves to God's appointed Davidic ruler (cf. Hos 1:11; Eze 37:21-24).²⁶
All this to take place in the "latter days" — in messianic times (cf. Isa 2:2).

Hosea 11:8-11

Yahweh expresses his extreme reluctance to give Israel up to judgment (11:8-9).

And he is determined to call a remnant back from exile to their own land (11:10-11).

Hosea 13:14

Amidst Yahweh's indictment of Israel, he appears to express a remarkable promise of restoration:

I shall ransom them from the power of Sheol; I shall redeem them from Death.

O Death, where are your plagues? O Sheol, where is your sting?

The nation had "died" through its Baal worship (Hos 13:1), but here God seemingly promises deliverance from Sheol (the grave) and Death.

Yahweh, throughout Hosea, expresses his reluctance to give Israel up to judgment (e.g., Hos 11:8-9).

²⁶ To truly belong to God's people and partake of his covenant blessings, one has to submit to his appointed king.

The above interpretation, however, may not be correct.

In view of the immediate context (i.e., concerning judgment about to fall on the northern kingdom),²⁷ it is more likely that 13:14 should be read negatively — as a pair of rhetorical questions and inviting Death and Sheol to do their worst:

Shall I ransom them from the power of Sheol? Shall I redeem them from Death?

[No, I will not!]

O Death, bring on your plagues! O Sheol, bring on your sting!

*Compassion is hidden from my eyes.*²⁸

As the following verses (13:15-16) intimate, judgment and violent death would soon overtake Israel and her capital Samaria by the hand of the Assyrian invaders (733-722 BC).

Paul's positive rendering (in 1 Corinthians 15:55) is perhaps based on the Septuagint text.

In any case, Paul interprets Hosea's prophecy in the light of Jesus' death and resurrection — Jesus has absorbed death's power and sting, rendering death completely impotent.²⁹

The death and resurrection of Jesus has ensured that "Israel" will be restored, not destroyed.

²⁷ The ESV's heading for this entire section of Hosea (chapter 13) is The LORD's Relentless Judgment on Israel.

²⁸ The NET Bible (New English Translation) supports this reading. Other versions that render this verse interrogatively include the AMP, CJB, ESV (2001 edition), EXB, LEB, LSB, NASB, NLT, and RSV.

²⁹ As Ciampa and Rosner note, "If in Hosea death is called upon to punish sin, Paul shows that such a role is no longer needed. [Death's sting has been] drained of potency." Restoration in Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Micah, and Zephaniah

Joel 2:28 – 3:21

Date: Before the final Babylonian siege and conquest of Jerusalem (in 587 to 586 BC).³⁰

- “Afterward” — in the messianic era — God’s Spirit will be poured out on all of his people (2:28-29).
The Spirit’s descent at Pentecost fulfills Joel’s prophecy (Ac 2:17-18).
So does his indwelling of New Covenant believers (Rom 8:9).
- Cosmic “day of the LORD” (judgment) imagery (2:30-31), quoted by Peter in Acts 2:19-20.
- At that time those who call on God’s name will be delivered:
On Mt. Zion and in Jerusalem there will be “those who escape”, “survivors” — a chosen remnant (2:32).
Note how Peter goes on (in Acts 2:38-40) to urge his Jewish listeners to repent and be baptized in order to be delivered from the judgment to befall that wicked generation (in AD 70). Salvation, forgiveness, and the gift of the Spirit are for them and for all whom God calls to himself (Ac 2:39; cf. 2:21).
- Judah and Jerusalem’s restoration will coincide with a time of judgment upon the nations (3:1-2):
God will gather the nations to the Valley of Jehoshaphat near Jerusalem and there judge them for their mistreatment of his people (3:2).

Here’s Joel’s graphic description of this judgment (Joel 3:14-16, WEB):

¹⁴ Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision!

For the day of Yahweh is near, in the valley of decision.

¹⁵ The sun and the moon are darkened, and the stars withdraw their shining.

¹⁶ Yahweh will roar from Zion, and thunder from Jerusalem.

- The nations’ judgment will prove that God again dwells in Zion (3:17a).
- Restored Jerusalem will be holy; never again will she be invaded by foreigners (3:17b).
- Restored Judah will be exceedingly fruitful.
Water will flow from the temple to water the desert (3:18; cf. Eze 47:1-12; Zec 14:8; Rev 22:1-2).
- Judah and Jerusalem will be inhabited forever.
God will forgive his people’s sin, and will dwell in their midst in Zion (3:20-21).

Amos 9

Date: Before 753 BC, 20+ years prior to the Assyrian invasions.

- God will judge Israel. Sinners will be destroyed, but a remnant of the nation will be spared (9:8-10).
- Ultimately, David’s fallen dynasty will be restored, along with the former dominion (of David and Solomon) over the surrounding nations (9:11-12). Amos is here reminding his northern audience that God’s salvific purposes are tied to the house of David, which they had long rejected.
“Remnant of Edom” refers to those of that (hostile) nation who survive God’s judgment (cf. Am 1:11-12).
With the phrase “all the nations that bear my name” (9:12) Amos anticipates God’s ownership of the world’s nations. Bearing (or being called by) God’s name was a privilege belonging to his covenant people (Isa 43:7; 63:19), but someday the nations themselves will enjoy this privilege — they, too, will belong to God.
All this being fulfilled in Christ’s heavenly rule, and in his gospel “conquest” of the nations (Ac 15:14-17).

³⁰ References early in Joel to God’s temple — to its priestly ministries, its offerings, and the call for people to come to God’s house (Joel 1:13-14) — would seemingly require a date prior to the final Babylonian siege, which began in January 587 BC. Later references to the casting of lots for people and to Edom’s violence against Judah (Joel 3:3, 19) suggest that these prophecies were given after the Babylonian conquest (see Psalm 137:7; Obadiah 1:10-14).

- Israel will return from exile and the ruined cities will be rebuilt (9:14). They will enjoy Edenic prosperity (9:13; cf. Joel 3:18); never again will they be uprooted from their land (9:15).

Obadiah

Date: After the fall of Jerusalem in 586 BC (1:11), but before the Babylonian campaign against Edom in 551 BC.

Obadiah is a message of judgment on Edom. That nation had failed to help their Judahite brothers during the Babylonian crisis of 587-586 BC, siding instead with the invaders (1:10-14; cf. Ps 137:7; Eze 25:12; 35:5).

Edom initially escaped conquest by the Babylonians.

But Obadiah, along with other prophets, foretells their contrasting final destinies: Zion will ultimately be restored, but Edom will be totally destroyed (cf. Lam 4:21-22; Ezekiel 35; Joel 3:19-20; Mal 1:2-5).

Obadiah's prophecies began to be fulfilled with the Babylonian campaign against Edom in 551 BC.³¹

Thereafter, the Edomites were gradually forced (ca. 550-400 BC) from their homeland by the Nabatean Arabs.

Here is a brief summary of Obadiah:

- A message from God to Israel: an envoy has been sent out, calling the nations to battle against Edom (1:1).
- Though feeling proud and secure in her mountain fortresses, Edom will be brought down (1:3-4).
- Edom will be utterly ransacked; her allies will betray her (1:5-7).
- Edom's famed wise men will be destroyed; there will be a great slaughter (1:8-9).
- The reason for God's judgment: the Edomites had failed to aid their Judahite brothers, even siding with the invaders (1:11; Ps 137:7); they had gloated over and taken advantage of Judah's misfortune (1:12-13); they had killed or handed over fleeing Judahite refugees (1:14).
- Edom's judgment points to the day of the Lord that will bring judgment on all nations (1:15).
Edom stands as the archetype of all of Israel's enemies; all enemies will be judged.
- Such judgment will be tied to Israel's own restoration (1:17; cf. Joel 3:1-2, 17-21).
- Restored Israel, perhaps including the northern tribes ("the house of Joseph"), will be God's agent to bring fiery judgment on Edom; there will be no survivors (1:18).
- The Israelite remnant will occupy the surrounding lands: land which had been lost will be recovered so that the full extent of the Promised Land is regained (1:19-20).
- The final word: "... and the kingdom shall be the LORD's" (1:21b).
God will rule over his people and over the nations.

³¹ Nabonidus, the last ruler of the Neo-Babylonian empire (ruled 556-539 BC), conducted a successful campaign against Edom that is traditionally dated to 553 BC but which more likely took place in 551 BC. See: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/25067039>.

Micah

Date: ca. 740 to 700 BC, during the reigns of Jotham (ended in 735 BC), Ahaz, and Hezekiah (1:1).

His earliest prophecy foretells the Assyrian destruction of Samaria (1:6), fulfilled in 722 BC.

His prophecy concerning Jerusalem's destruction was given during Hezekiah's reign (3:12; cf. Jer 26:18-19).

Micah was a contemporary of Isaiah and Hosea.

Like Isaiah, Micah alternates between messages of judgment and final restoration.

Micah addresses both Israel and Judah; he especially critiques the wealthy oppressors and corrupt leaders.

A major theme is that of the "Shepherd-King" who delivers and gathers a remnant of the nation:

Yahweh himself will fulfill this role (2:12-13; 4:6-8; 7:14), but so also will a certain Man (5:2-5a).

The restoration promises therefore have reference to the final, messianic kingdom.

Here is a brief summary of Micah's prophecies:

- Coming judgment on Israel and Judah (1:1 – 2:11):
Israel's capital, Samaria, will be totally destroyed (1:6). The Assyrians will sweep down into Judah, capturing several towns and laying siege to Jerusalem itself (1:8-16) — fulfilled in 701 BC.
An indictment of the wealthy oppressors (2:1-5) and false prophets (2:6-11).
- Promises of ultimate deliverance and restoration (2:12-13):
Yahweh will himself gather the remnant of Israel, and lead and shepherd his flock.
- An indictment of the leaders of Judah (chap. 3):
Leaders, priests and prophets are alike corrupt (3:11).
Consequently, Jerusalem and its temple will be destroyed and abandoned (3:12).³²
- Yet in messianic times Jerusalem and its temple will become a worship focus for the nations (4:1-3).
This prophecy was first seen and uttered by Isaiah (Isa 2:1-4).
Micah describes the peace and security to be enjoyed under God's rule (4:4; cf. 1Kgs 4:25; Zec 3:10).
Yahweh promises to gather the exiles and restore the nation; from Mt. Zion he will reign over them forever.
To Jerusalem (the "watchtower of the flock") former kingship and dominion will be restored (4:6-8, MEV).
- Micah foretells the end of the monarchy, and Judah's exile in and final deliverance from Babylon (4:9-10).
Jerusalem will be besieged and her king humiliated (5:1) — probably a reference to Zedekiah in 586 BC.
- From Bethlehem a Shepherd-King will arise to rule over the restored nation (5:2-5a):
His ancient origins (5:2) refers to his Davidic lineage and the secure covenant God made in 2 Samuel 7.
But until his birth Israel will be largely abandoned, having no king and oppressed by enemies (5:3a).
Under this Shepherd-King God's people will be reunited (5:3b), and they will live in complete safety (5:4).
All enemies will be defeated; indeed, the saved remnant will rule over their former enemies (5:5-9).
- The prophecy's conclusion (7:8-20):
God's wonders displayed in Israel's restoration (7:14-15) will make their enemies ashamed (7:10, 16).
These nations, overcome with fear, will turn to Israel's God (7:17).
God's will forgive the sin of the saved remnant "because he delights in steadfast love" (7:18).
Their sin will be decisively dealt with — trodden underfoot and hurled into the depths of the sea (7:19).
God's promises made to the patriarchs will yet be fulfilled (7:20).

³² The temple-mountain will be so neglected as to become overgrown with bushes. Micah's threat here evidently led to the spiritual reformation under Hezekiah, so that Jerusalem's fall was averted for some 130 years (Jer 26:18-19).

Zephaniah

Date: During the reign of King Josiah (1:1), who ruled Judah from 640 to 609 BC, but prior to the fall of Nineveh in 612 BC (cf. 2:13-15).

Zephaniah proclaimed the approaching “day of the LORD” (1:7, 14) — the day of his wrath (1:18; 2:2-3).

Judgment was to come upon Judah and its neighbors, and upon the Assyrians.

These prophecies were to be fulfilled soon (1:7, 14).

Though not specifically mentioned, the Babylonians (as the agent of God’s judgment) were soon to expand and conquer these lands.

- Judgment will be an act of de-creation (1:2-3):

² “I will utterly sweep away everything from the face of the earth,” ...

³ “I will sweep away man and beast; ... the birds of the heavens and the fish of the sea, ...

I will cut off mankind from the face of the earth,” declares the LORD.

The language here is reminiscent of God’s utterances prior to the Flood (Gen 6:7).

Only this time the destruction will be by fire:

“For in the fire of my jealousy all the earth shall be consumed” (3:8; cf. 1:18).

- Judgment on Judah and Jerusalem (1:4-13):

For their idolatry and disloyalty to Yahweh (1:4-6). The day of the Lord is fast approaching (1:7).

Jerusalem will be searched and every sinful person punished (1:12).

- The Great Day of the Lord (1:14 – 2:15):

A day of wrath, anguish, ruin, darkness, gloom, clouds, blackness (1:15, WEB).

God judgment is directed against Judah (2:1-3) and the surrounding nations (2:4-15).

The humble in Judah are urged to seek God so that they might be sheltered from his wrath (2:3).

Philistia will be judged (2:4-7).

Moab and Ammon will be destroyed for their proud mocking of God’s people (2:8, 10).

God will restore Judah’s fortunes. The remnant who survive will inherit these surrounding nations (2:7, 9).

Cush (Ethiopia and Egypt) “shall be slain by my sword” (2:12). The Babylonian army was God’s “sword”.

Assyria’s capital, Nineveh, will be utterly destroyed (2:13-15).

That city was sacked by the Babylonians and Medes in 612 BC.

- Indictment of Jerusalem (3:1-8):

The city is rebellious (3:1); she disregards God (3:2). Her rulers, prophets and priests are corrupt (3:3-4).

Yahweh alone, within the city, is righteous, and he daily dispenses justice (3:5).

His destruction of foreign cities was meant to serve as a warning to Jerusalem, but to no avail (3:6-7).

God will gather the nations for judgment. The whole world will be consumed by his wrath (3:8).

- After judgment, the nations will turn to Yahweh (3:9):

“For at that time I will change the speech of the peoples to a pure speech, that all of them may call upon the name of the LORD and serve him with one accord.”

Such godly unity will reverse the judgment at Babel.

- The Israelite exiles will also be gathered, and Jerusalem will be restored (3:10-20):

From the most distant lands God’s scattered people will come to Jerusalem to bring him offerings (3:10).

Jerusalem will be inhabited by the humble remnant who trust God; the haughty will be removed (3:11-13).

Yahweh will deal with their oppressors and gather the exiles. He will “change their shame into praise and renown in all the earth” when he restores and forgives them (3:19-20; cf. 3:11).

Restoration in the Post-exilic Prophets

Cyrus in 538 BC issued a decree allowing the Jews to return to Jerusalem and rebuild their temple.

Indeed, he offered to fund the project (Ezr 1:2-4; 6:3-5).

Following his decree, around 50,000 Jews returned to Judah.

The new temple's foundation was completed in 536 BC amidst great rejoicing (Ezr 3:8-11).

However, enemies in surrounding nations opposed the rebuild and managed to halt the work (Ezr 4:1-5).

Only much later, through the promptings of Haggai and Zechariah, did work on the temple finally resume:

Work resumed on 21 September 520 BC (Hag 1:15), and the new temple was completed on 12 March 516 BC (Ezr 6:15).

The restoration community was small and demoralized. Only some of God's promises through Isaiah and other prophets had been fulfilled in their return:

- Judah comprised only a small portion of its former territory — some 32 by 48 km in extent — with a population of perhaps 150,000.³³
- Though grateful for their return, the people still viewed themselves as being slaves of their foreign rulers (Ezr 9:8-9; Neh 9:36-37).

They lived in the midst of a mixed, and often antagonistic, population.

- The earlier prophets (Isaiah, Micah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel) had promised a glorious future: God's house would become the focus for a world that feared Yahweh. But now there was no Davidic king — no peace, prosperity, security. The new temple was not glorious, and God had not returned to indwell it. The promised New Covenant, and the outpouring of God's Spirit, had not materialized.
- Non-fulfillment led to doubts about God's love, to despondency and spiritual lethargy. God was seemingly far away — disinterested.

The post-exilic prophets Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi spoke into this situation.

So, too, did the author of the two books of Chronicles.

Each prophet/author explains how, despite appearances, Yahweh is continuing to work out his purposes.

The promised messianic future is right on track!

Haggai 1

A call to renew the work on God's house.

Date: Aug. 29 to Sept. 21, 520 BC — some 16 years after the temple's foundation had been laid.

- The people had been putting their own interests ahead of God's concerns (1:2-4, 9). The lack of progress on the temple was more their own fault than those of their enemies.
- God was not far away, but near and involved: He had personally thwarted their agricultural endeavors (1:6, 9-11).
- The people listened to, and obeyed, the promptings of Haggai and Zechariah (1:12; Ezr 5:1-2). As a result, God encouraged them with his promise to be with them (1:13). (Work on the temple resumed on 21 September 520 BC — see Haggai 1:15.)

³³ From the ESV Study Bible (Wheaton, IL: Crossway, 2008), Introduction to Malachi, p. 1772.

Haggai 2

Date: Oct. 17 to Dec. 18, 520 BC:

- The new temple was insignificant in comparison with that built by Solomon (2:3; cf. Ezr 3:12). Yet God encourages them to continue with the work; he is with them, just he was in the Exodus (2:4-5).
- The new temple will ultimately be more glorious than the former structure (2:9). For God will “once more ... shake the heavens and the earth and the sea and the dry land ... [and] all nations, so that the treasures of all nations shall come in” (2:6-7).³⁴
The nations will willingly offer back to God what belongs to him (2:8); they will beautify and adorn his house with their best “treasures”.³⁵
- Because of their response to Haggai’s message, God will henceforth bless their everyday work (2:19).
- God will overthrow the entire world order when he fulfills his (messianic) promises (2:21-22).
- God has chosen Zerubbabel as his new “signet ring” in place of his discarded grandfather, King Jehoiachin. Zerubbabel is thereby raised to a position of special honor and royal authority (2:23; cf. Jer 22:24-30).³⁶
Indeed, he is the (messianic) “servant” through whom Yahweh’s purposes will be accomplished: the temple will be made glorious, the world order overthrown, and Davidic kingship restored.

Zechariah 1 – 5

Date: Oct./Nov. 520 BC to ?? 518 BC.

Work had recently resumed on the new temple.

Zechariah begins with a call to repentance (1:2-6):

Turning to God was a prerequisite for his return to them (1:3).

They must not to be like their stubborn forefathers (1:4).

Though their forefathers and the prophets who warned them had all died, God’s words through those prophets lived on and had been fulfilled (1:5-6a). Apparently once in exile, some of their forefathers had repented (1:6b).

First Vision: Horsemen sent throughout the earth (Zechariah 1:7-17).

Date: Feb. 15, 519 BC, just two months after Haggai’s last “shaking” prophecy (Hag 2:20-22).

Stability and peace had returned to the Persian Empire following a period of internal unrest (1:11).³⁷

Cornelis Vanderwaal comments:

... the shaking of heaven and earth of which Haggai prophesied has not yet begun. ...

The throne of the heathen kings is not shaken, and there is no sign of the Messiah taking over the throne.³⁸

³⁴ The first time God shook the world order was when he gave Israel the law at Mount Sinai (Ex 19:18; Heb 12:26). At that time, he broke into the darkness of the pagan world with the light of his law. But Haggai speaks of a further shaking and toppling of the world order (Hag 2:6-7, 21-22). The author of Hebrews (in 12:26-28) takes up Haggai’s prophecy and relates it to the coming of God’s eternal New Covenant kingdom. The material order (“things that have been made”) will be shaken and removed, so that the “kingdom that cannot be shaken” might remain (Heb 12:27-28). He is referring to the Mosaic order’s provisional and typical entities — the Jerusalem temple with its priesthood, sacrifices and ceremonies — all now “obsolete” and “ready to vanish away” (Heb 8:13). But the unshakeable spiritual city and kingdom will remain (Heb 12:22, 28).

³⁵ Haggai’s prophecy should be related to similar prophecies in Isaiah 60:5-7, 11, 13, 17; 61:6; 66:12. All such prophecies are fulfilled in God’s ultimate temple-city — the New Jerusalem, the Church (Rev 21:24, 26; cf. Eph 2:21).

³⁶ A signet ring was worn by the king’s representative who exercised his royal authority. Used to stamp documents, it marked them as genuine and authoritative (Gen 41:42; Est 8:8). It could further serve as a pledge or guarantee of full payment.

³⁷ Darius the Great reigned from 522 to 486 BC, with his first two years spent consolidating power and putting down rebellions.

³⁸ Cornelis Vanderwaal, Search the Scriptures, Volume 6: Hosea-Malachi (St. Catharines, Ontario: Paideia Press, 1979), p. 100.

Indeed, it seemed that God was still angry with Judah and Jerusalem (1:12).

But God assures the people of his jealous love for Jerusalem (1:14).

He was somewhat angry with his people, but now he is “exceedingly angry” with the complacent nations that he had employed to punish his people (1:15; cf. Zec 1:18-21).

For those nations went too far; they “furthered the disaster” by seeking to destroy Israel as a people.³⁹

God continues to assure his people of his good intent towards them — both the temple and the city will be rebuilt, and the nation will greatly prosper (1:16-17).

Second Vision: Horns and craftsmen (Zechariah 1:18-21).

These “horns” — the nations and world-powers that had earlier scattered God’s people — though currently at rest and feeling “secure” (Zec 1:11, 15), will in turn be terrified and destroyed by “craftsmen” (1:18-21).

God is sovereign, and his choice of Jerusalem means that his kingdom will surely come (cf. Zec 14:9).

Third Vision: A man with a measuring line (Zechariah 2).

Jerusalem will be greatly enlarged; Yahweh will himself be its protecting wall of fire, and its glory within (2:4-5).

Therefore, those Jews still living in Babylon should return (2:6-7).

God will return to Jerusalem to live with his people — among whom will be many Gentiles (2:10-11).

Fourth Vision: Clean Garments for Joshua (Zechariah 3).

A heavenly courtroom scene, with the angel of the Lord as the judge, Joshua the high priest as defendant, and Satan as the prosecutor (3:1).

Satan’s case: Joshua is defiled, so how can he fulfill his high-priestly office? On the Day of Atonement, how can the nation’s defilement be removed when their mediator is himself polluted?

But Satan’s charges are inadmissible: Joshua’s rescue from exile means he is free from condemnation (3:2).

Joshua’s “filthy garments” (symbolizing his sin) are removed; he is reclothed with “pure vestments” that signify his new (imputed) righteousness and his reinstatement to his high-priestly office (3:4-5).

So now he can govern Yahweh’s new temple; indeed, as the nation’s mediator he will enjoy direct access to God, as if he were himself a member of the heavenly council (3:7). God will no longer be distant from his people!

Joshua and his fellow priests foreshadowed the “the Branch”, the promised King (cf. Isa 11:1; Jer 23:5), through whom the nation’s sin will be completely removed “in a single day” — the definitive Day of Atonement (3:8-9).⁴⁰

Then the nation will enjoy peace, like that enjoyed at the height of Solomon’s reign (3:10; cf. 1Kgs 4:25; Mic 4:4).

Fifth Vision: The Golden Lampstand and Olive Trees (Zechariah 4).

The two olive trees supply oil to a bowl or tank which in turn supplies oil to the seven lamps of the lampstand.

With this arrangement, the supply of oil is maintained and the lamps continue to burn.

The olive trees are God’s anointed servants — Zerubbabel from the royal line of David and Joshua the high priest (4:14). The oil signifies God’s Spirit.

The vision shows that God’s work will certainly progress:

Through the leadership and cooperation of Zerubbabel and Joshua the lamp will continue to burn and God’s work progress — yet not so much through human effort, but through dependence on God’s Spirit (4:6).

Under Zerubbabel, all difficulties and opposition will be overcome and the temple completed (4:7-10):

Much rejoicing will attend the work’s completion when Zerubbabel places the final capstone (4:7).

So, no one should make light of the small progress made thus far (4:10a).

³⁹ The Assyrians and Babylonians were used by God to discipline his people, but they evidently went well beyond the call of duty (cf. Isa 10:5-7; 47:6).

⁴⁰ The nation’s sin was removed annually on Yom Kippur — the Day of Atonement (Leviticus 16). The high priest’s action on that day foreshadowed Jesus’ work on the cross, whereby “in a single day” the sin of God’s people was completely and forever atoned for.

Sixth and Seventh Visions: The Flying Scroll, and a Woman named “Wickedness” (Zechariah 5).
For God to return to dwell in the land (cf. Zec 2:10-11; 8:3) it must first be purged of evil.
Sin will be punished (5:1-4), and wickedness must be banished (5:5-11).⁴¹

Eighth Vision: Horses and Chariots (Zechariah 6:1-8).

Four “strong” horses with chariots are sent out throughout the world.

Kurt Simmons notes that:

In Zechariah, the horsemen symbolize God’s activity among the nations of the world to execute wrath and bring about his purpose.⁴²

Zechariah 6:9-14

Zechariah is to get a crown made and place it on the head of Joshua.

In this too, Joshua was foreshadowing “the Branch” who will build God’s temple and reign as both king and priest — uniting the two offices (6:9-13).

Zechariah 7

Date: Dec. 518 BC.

An enquiry from the people concerning their ritual fasts of the past (nearly) 70 years:

Should they continue to show sorrow and repentance for the disasters that had befallen their land (7:2-3)?

(No doubt performed to change God’s disposition toward them and earn his favor!)

In answer, God questions the sincerity of their observances and calls for true obedience to his covenant (7:4-10).

Failure of their forefathers to heed the earlier prophets had aroused God’s anger, resulting in the curse for covenant disobedience: the nation’s exile and the land’s desolation (7:11-14; cf. Lev 26:33; Dt 28:64).

Zechariah 8

Judgment is not the last word!

For God now graciously promises to renew his covenant and bless Jerusalem:

- He is intensely jealous for Zion (8:2).
He will return to dwell therein. Jerusalem will then be called “The City of Truth” and Mount Zion will be called “The Holy Mountain” (8:2-3, WEB).
- A depiction of Jerusalem’s future — a community enjoying peace and prosperity (8:4-5).
A truly remarkable transformation, given their present impoverished circumstances (8:6).
- God will gather his scattered people and bring them back to live in Jerusalem; he will restore his covenant relationship with them (8:7-8).
- A further encouragement to continue building the temple, with a promise of blessing (8:9-13).
- God has fully determined to bring good to Jerusalem and to the people of Judah (8:14-15).
He again calls for repentance — for truth and justice (8:16-17).
- The various fasts that recalled the former disasters will become joyful feasts instead (8:19; cf. Zec 7:3, 5).⁴³
- God’s blessings on his people will attract even foreigners to seek the Lord in Jerusalem (8:20-23).

⁴¹ Sent packing to the land of Shinar (Babylonia), where it belongs (Zec 5:11)!

⁴² Kurt M. Simmons, The Consummation of the Ages (Carlsbad, NM: Bimillennial Preterist Association, 2003), p. 144.

⁴³ The fasts of the fourth, fifth, seventh and tenth months (Zec 8:19) recalled, respectively, the breaching of Jerusalem’s walls by the Babylonian army (Jer 39:2); their destruction of the city and temple (Jer 52:12-14); Gedaliah’s assassination (Jer 41:1-2); the time when the Babylonian siege had first begun (Jer 39:1).

Zechariah 9 – 14

Further prophecies, probably given many years later.

Themes include God's judgment of Israel's enemies; the coming messianic king; Jerusalem's restoration:

- God will judge the surrounding nations but deliver his own people (9:1-8):
Alexander the Great's campaign is here foretold — his subjugation of powerful cities (in Syria, Phoenicia, and Philistia) and his sparing of Jerusalem.
The Philistines remnant will be converted out of idolatry and incorporated into the people of God (9:7).
Ultimately, God's presence in the temple will ensure that foreigners never again oppress his people (9:8).
- Jerusalem's king will come to her "righteous, and having salvation; lowly, and riding on a donkey ..." (9:9, WEB). The Hebrew participle here should rather be taken in its passive sense: "saved", "delivered".
He will bring peace to the reunited kingdom ("Ephraim" = Israel) and to the nations; his rule will extend to the ends of the earth (9:10; cf. Ps 72:8; Isa 2:4).
All this was fulfilled in Jesus, who entered Jerusalem riding on a donkey (Mt 21:1-11).
Jesus learned obedience through suffering and sought (and finally received) from his Father deliverance from death itself (Heb 5:7-8).
Through him Israel has been restored, and his peaceable rule extends via the gospel to the nations as well.
- Messiah's victories over his enemies (9:13-17).
The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges comments concerning these verses:

The prophecy now moves forward, and takes for its groundwork a later epoch in the future history of the Jews. As their deliverance from their enemies without fighting, in the times of Alexander (Zechariah 9:1-8), was foretold as the pledge and type of Messiah's kingdom of peace (Zechariah 9:9-12), so their victories over the Seleucidae, in the times of the Maccabees, are in these verses foretold as the pledge and type of Messiah's victories over all His enemies.⁴⁴
- A fountain will be present to wash away the sin of Jerusalem's inhabitants (13:1; cf. Zec 3:9).
God himself will remove idolatry and false prophecy from the land (13:2-6).
- The sword of Yahweh's judgment will strike the Good Shepherd — God's close associate — leading to the scattering of God's people. Through these trials, God will refine a remnant of the nation and restore them to a proper covenant relationship with himself (13:7-9).
- God will gather the nations to fight against Jerusalem (14:1-2).
He himself will fight against and judge those nations (14:3-5, 12-15).
- At that time "living waters" will flow from Jerusalem (14:8).
Yahweh "will be king over all the earth" (14:9).
- Following their judgment, the nations will come to worship Yahweh in Jerusalem — to celebrate, and indeed to fulfill, the Feast of Tabernacles (14:16-19).⁴⁵
- Everything and everyone in Judah and Jerusalem will be holy (14:20-21).

⁴⁵ The Feast of Tabernacles or Ingathering signified the ultimate conversion of the nations to the Lord. Seventy bullocks were to be sacrificed for the 70 nations of the world (Num 29:12-38; cf. Genesis 10), in anticipation of their ingathering into God's kingdom (Zec 14:16-19). See David Chilton, Paradise Restored (Tyler, TX: Reconstruction Press, 1985), p. 45.

Malachi

Date: 430 BC?

The apparent non-fulfillment of God's promises had led to doubts about his love and justice.

Worship had degenerated into mere formality, and the people no longer took God's law seriously.

Through the prophet, God admonishes:

- the people for doubting his love for them (1:2-5).
Yet God had shown his love by graciously restoring Judah after her exile — in contrast to his treatment of Edom whom he was about to irreversibly destroy.
- both priests and people for dishonoring him through worthless offerings (1:6-14).⁴⁶
- the priests for unfaithfulness to their calling (2:1-9).
- the people for their infidelity (2:10-16):
They could not trust their fellow Israelites (2:10); they had married foreign women in violation of God's covenant (2:11-12); through divorce they had broken their own marriage covenants (2:14-16).
- the people for their cynical charge concerning God's justice (2:17).

Further messages:

- The One (the Messiah) they seek will indeed come, but he will come to judge and purify them first (3:1-5).
- A call to faithfully tithe so that God can bless them again (3:6-12).
- God responds to the cynical charge, made by the outwardly religious who go about as "mourners", that serving him is futile because the arrogant and defiant are the ones who prosper (3:13-15, MEV).
But God indeed takes careful note of the righteous who fear him — they are his "treasured possession".
On Judgment Day God will spare them and clearly distinguish them from the wicked.
Evildoers will be completely burned up (3:16 – 4:3).

Final admonition: Remember God's law (4:4-6):

God will send them "Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the LORD" (4:5, KJV).
God's final word to his OT people is a threat of total destruction for continued disobedience (4:6).⁴⁷

New Testament fulfilment:

John the Baptist fulfilled Malachi's "Elijah" prophecy (Lk 1:17; Mt 11:14; 17:10-13).

John warned Israel of coming judgment (Mt 3:7), and he did so using language reminiscent of Malachi:

- Those not producing good fruit will be cut down and thrown into the fire (Mt 3:10).
- Messiah will baptize (purify) Israel with the Holy Spirit and with fire (Mt 3:11; cf. Mal 3:2-3).
- Messiah will separate the wheat but burn up the chaff with "unquenchable fire" (Mt 3:12; cf. Mal 4:1).

Judgment began with the ministry of Jesus and culminated with the Roman destruction of Jerusalem in AD 70.

That event served as the definitive "day of the LORD" in fulfilment of OT prophecies.

See Luke 21:22; Acts 2:20; Hebrews 10:25; 2 Peter 3:10, 12.

⁴⁶ Yahweh contrasts his people's hypocritical worship with the genuine worship that will someday characterize the nations: For from the rising of the sun to its setting my name will be great among the nations, and in every place incense will be offered to my name, and a pure offering. For my name will be great among the nations, says the LORD of hosts. (Mal 1:11).

⁴⁷ For continued disobedience God will strike the land (of Israel) with a "curse" (Mal 4:6). The Hebrew noun hêrem (Strong's H2764) refers to the irrevocable giving over or devoting of things or persons to God, often by totally destroying them. And so, in the case of Jericho, everything and everyone within the city was "devoted to the LORD for destruction" (Jos 6:17).

Appendix: The dating of Isaiah's prophecies

Isaiah's prophecies are for the most part impossible to accurately date.

The kings referred to in Isaiah 1:1 reigned as follows (not including their time as co-regents):

Uzziah: 767-740 BC; Jotham: 740-735 BC; Ahaz: 735-715 BC; Hezekiah: 715-686 BC.

According to tradition, Isaiah died by being sawn in two during the reign of King Manasseh (686-642 BC).

(Hebrews 11:37 seems to allude to this.)

Dates can be assigned to the following:

- Isaiah 1 – 5: Around the time of his commissioning vision of chapter 6. The “woe” Isaiah pronounces on himself in 6:5 thematically completes the six preceding “woes” of chapter 5 (5:8, 11, 18, 20, 21, 22). A date just prior to King Uzziah's death (in 740 BC) therefore seems likely (cf. 1:1; 6:1).
- Isaiah 6: The prophet's commissioning in 740/739 BC (6:1).
- Isaiah 7:1: The invasion of Judah by Syria and Israel. This occurred in 735/734 BC, at the start of Ahaz's reign.
- Isaiah 7:16: Syria and Israel will be laid waste — foretelling the Assyrian campaigns of 733/732 BC.
- Isaiah 8:4: Damascus and Samaria will be plundered by the Assyrians within about two years. This prophecy was given ca. 734 BC.
- Isaiah 15 – 16: Prophecies against Moab given in 718 BC, three years prior to the Assyrian campaign under Sargon II (16:14).
- Isaiah 19 – 20: Prophecies against Egypt and Cush. Chapter 20 was given in 711 BC (20:1-2). These were fulfilled some 40 years later with the Assyrian campaigns under Esarhaddon and Ashurbanipal.⁴⁸
- Isaiah 28:1-4: A prophecy of the fall of Samaria, given prior to the Assyrian siege of 725-722 BC.
- Isaiah 32: A prophecy given one year prior to Sennacherib's invasion of Judah (32:10) — therefore, 702 BC.
- Isaiah 36 – 37:
Sennacherib's invasion of Judah and threat to Jerusalem in Hezekiah's 14th year (36:1) — 701 BC.
- Isaiah 38 – 39: Hezekiah's illness probably occurred just prior to the Assyrian invasion of 701 BC (38:6). Hezekiah's life was extended by 15 years (38:5); he reigned until about 686 BC.
- Babylon's ascendancy and Judah's exile are foretold in 39:6-7.
These two verses provide a bridge to Isaiah's final section:
Chapters 40 – 66 anticipate events of the distant future — Judah's eventual return from Babylon.
The prophecies of this section were probably given post-701 BC.
- Sennacherib's assassination in 681 BC is reported in 37:38.
Either Isaiah was then still alive, or this represents a later editorial updating.

We may note that the book of Isaiah does not have the prophet's messages arranged in strict chronological order.

⁴⁸ Isaiah 19 – 20 is anticipating one or other of the Assyrian campaigns against Egypt: Esarhaddon conquered Egypt in 671 BC. Then, following an Egyptian revolt, his successor Ashurbanipal reinvaded in 667 BC, and again in 663. Isaiah 20:3-4 is likely foretelling the brutal 663 BC sacking of Thebes: the city was thoroughly plundered and its inhabitants deported. So memorable was this sacking that Nahum later (ironically) references it in his prophecy against Nineveh (Nah 3:8-10).
